Stray dog Impact on the social environment

It has been said in the news or in the movies that there are too many stray dogs.it will only consume more social and national resources. There are too many Many people did not do their homework because of impulse, or even had no financial means to keep pets, and were abandoned in the end. Through this paper, let everyone understand the impact of stray dogs in Taiwan on the entire society.

Stray dogs in Taiwan have diverse appearance and strong survival ability. They often form small groups, are territorial, and display flexible eating habits. These dogs require the care and assistance of humans to provide food, water and medical attention. Some stray dogs are friendly and seek human attention, but some may be suspicious due to abuse.

Recommendations from our group:

Governments, civil society and individuals should all work together for comprehensive solutions . Source management is an important direction to solve the problem of stray dogs, including measures such as strengthening responsibility education for owners, promoting neutering programs, and providing safe shelters. Through the joint efforts of everyone, the problem of stray dogs can be effectively solved, and a social environment in which humans and animals coexist harmoniously can be established.
